ANNIVERSARY REGATTA, 1852.

Mrs. J. E. ALLISON again avails herself of the opportunity of returning her sincere thanks to her numerous friends and the public for the liberal patronage received from them for the past four years. Mrs. A. begs to inform them that she will have a booth at the forthcoming regatta, at Fort Macquarie, situate on the road to the Domain, near the lime kilns, which is a far more advantageous situation than her former spot, known as Number One, besides affording a complete view of the harbour and the surrounding scenery. She begs to state, in allusion to the advertisements in Bell's Life newspaper, wherein such an unwarrantable liberty is taken with her name, is entirely without her knowledge or consent (circumstances over which she had no control having deprived her of her former stand); she is therefore sure that such a mode of trying to allure her friends will recoil with full force upon parties who, calling themselves men, could be guilty of such paltry meanness. She therefore trusts that her friends will surround her on the above occasion, when with the good wholesome fare and cleanliness, combined with civility and attention they will receive, will not cause them to regret patronising the old face in a new situation, in preference to the boasted royalty of Number One. The sumptuous luncheon to be provided on the occasion will consist of every delicacy of the season, whilst the superior quality of wines, spirits, ale, porter, &c., are too well known to need any comment.

THE WATER COMMISSION.

We must do the Government the justice of acknowledging that, in the great question of our City Water Supply, they have displayed an amount of energy and good sense which puts our municipal representatives to shame. When they saw that those to whom the duty of guarding the interests of the city naturally as well as legally belonged, were taking no steps for securing to its inhabitants an abundant and permanent supply of that vital element, the Government, as the supreme guardians of our lives, boldly took the matter into their own hands. And who will blame them for doing so? Who will not rather invoke blessings on their heads for having so nobly interfered to save us from one of the direst calamities that could befal a large and dense population?

It is admitted on all hands that in referring this question to a board of Commissioners, whose members represent the commercial and the manufacturing not less than scientific interests, the Government took the best course that was open to them. And we are glad to find that the Commissioners have entered upon their important labours in a way which bids fair to justify the discretion exercised in their selection, and to work out a sound solution of the difficult problem placed in their hands. Their sittings are frequent; they have publicly invited suggestions from any quarter, connected with the object of their inquiry; and they express a firm determination to spare no pains in seeking to arrive at results which shall be satisfactory to the Government and the public, and creditable to themselves.

The Commissioners will doubtless bear in mind, that while it is undoubtedly of great importance that means should be devised for securing to Sydney, with the least possible delay, a supply of water adequate to its immediate wants, and to what may reasonably be deemed will be its wants for several years to come, yet the grand object to be sought is such a supply as shall be sufficient for centuries, and for any amount of population which those centuries may bring forth; and such a supply, moreover, as may be depended upon, without apprehension or misgiving, for its purity and abundance in all seasons, and under all circumstances.

We also trust that the Commissioners will be deeply impressed with the conviction, that in this business the question of expense is one of comparative insignificance. Cost what it may, water must be had—water of the purest quality that can be found within our reach, and in the largest quantities that mechanical science can find the means of procuring and conveying. Let the Commissioners have confidence in the numbers and in the wealth of our posterity; and as they have to study the well-being of posterity as well as that of the now-living generation, let them not hesitate to cast upon posterity a reasonable share of the cost. On the security of the corporate resources which every body foresees must be possessed by this great metropolis of the Western Pacific, and for a purpose essential to the lives of its inhabitants through all time coming, any amount of money may be borrowed with ease. And, however enormous that amount may be, let there be no hesitation between incurring the debt, and jeopardising the lives of our unborn descendants.

It is not our place to go into details, but we may be permitted to observe that our conviction for many years has been, and the experience of every successive year has confirmed it, that the only source of Water Supply that the inhabitants of Sydney can absolutely depend upon for permanent abundance and permanent purity, in all seasons, and under every imaginable contingency, is the River Hawkesbury or Nepean. The waters of that magnificent channel are equal in sweetness and purity to those of the Nile itself; they have never been known to fail; they have never been known so far to fail as to be unequal to any amount of consumption which can be estimated for the Great Future of our city.

Unless, then, any other source can be found, not only less difficult of access, but equally to be relied upon for all that is indispensable, it is earnestly to be hoped that no consideration of expense will be allowed to prevent the Commissioners from recommending our great Western River as the fountain-head of our supply.

MR. O'NEIL BRENAN AND MR. BEIT

Nothing tends so much to bring Judges into ridicule, and to produce a want of confidence in those appointed to dispense justice, as disputes and differences on the Bench. Patience, forbearance, and equanimity of temper, are the cardinal virtues which ought to regulate all judicial Benches, whether presided over by Judges of the Supreme Court, or composed of gentlemen simply holding Her Majesty's Commission of the Peace. When decorum disappears from the judicial tribunal, and magistrates during solemn investigations indulge in mutual personalities, all respect for the Bench ceases, and suitors will undergo imposition rather than seek justice from such a fountain. Too much care, too much prudence, too much consideration cannot be exhibited by magistrates to prevent Courts being brought into contempt; and if magistrates cannot get through their business without squabbling, they have a private room to which their differences should be confined; at all events, if a difference of opinion exists on the Bench, it should be arranged sotto voce, and not by open abuse in a court of justice; and magistrates should not conduct themselves like girls, by each endeavouring to get the last word of an angry argument. The Judges of the Supreme Court frequently differ on points on which they are called upon to decide; but the Judicial Bench would create disgust in the minds of the public, if their judgments could not be given without exhibition of temper and feeling.

We have been led into these remarks by the disgraceful scenes which were exhibited at the Water Police Court last week in the case of the prosecution against Captain Brazier, of the whaling barque Jane, who appeared before Messrs. O'Neil Brenan, Beit, and John Campbell, to answer a charge under the New South Wales Merchant Seamen's Act, of having left one George Miller, one of his crew, on one of the Islands of the Solomon Group in the South Pacific, Captain Brazier subjecting himself, for such misconduct, to a prosecution for a misdemeanour. From the report of the case (which occupied the attention of the Magistrates for three days,) as published in Monday's Herald, it appears that the commencement of the judicial sparring between Mr. O'Neil Brenan and Mr. Beit, had its origin in the question of the production or non-production of the ship's log for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the Chief Officer, who was a witness in the case; Mr. Brenan objecting to the witness referring to the log on the ground that the Chief Officer's credibility ought to be tested by his statement on memory, in the same manner as that of a common seaman would be tested, whilst Mr. Beit insisted that the log should be put into the witness' hands, contending that his memory had no right to be taxed when entries in his own handwriting were available for the guidance of the Bench. We have always been under the impression, and we are so still, that the magistrates composing a court of petty sessions have power to sift complaints before them with the greatest latitude as to points of evidence, but the view which Mr. Beit took of permitting the witness to refresh his memory from a memorandum in his own handwriting, was not only in accordance with common sense, but with every day's legal practice, and this, Mr. O'Neil Brenan, as a barrister, ought to have known. The skirmish appears not to have ended here; it was merely the firing of a train which was to terminate in an explosion. When the complainant's case was closed, Mr. Beit was of opinion that the second officer and some other witnesses who were acquainted with the circumstances, ought to be called, and threatened that if the Water Police Magistrate, Mr. Brenan, refused to examine them, he would call them himself. This was the tocsin for a second skirmish, and Mr. Brenan, pluming himself on his position as presiding Magistrate of the Court, is reported to have said—

I will not be dictated to in this manner as to its (the Court's) practice; the more especially as taking the course now insisted upon by Mr. Beit will, in my opinion, have a tendency to fustrate the ends of justice. Mr. Beit: Call the second officer, I will see whether I am magistrate or not. Mr. Brenan: I am extremely sorry to find a brother magistrate acting in so discourteous a manner, and persisting in what I firmly believe to be an improper course at this stage of the proceedings. I have already distinctly stated, that at the proper time I will, if it appear necessary, call the other officers. Mr. Beit: And I am equally sorry to see such highly improper and illegal practices obtaining in this Court. Call the second officer.

At this stage of the proceedings Mr. Brenan and Mr. Campbell left the Court, but the former returned and found Mr. Beit examining the second officer, when Mr. Brenan relieved himself by a further discharge of his feelings:—

It was most painful to him to have occasion to complain of disrespectful conduct to the Bench by a member thereof, who had been distinctly apprised of the practice of the Court of which he (Mr. Brenan) was the presiding magistrate, and whose practice, as the learned advocates who were present knew, their Honors the Judges of the Supreme Court would not interfere with.

Mr. Johnson said, that being thus appealed to, he must say that he thought all the magistrates on the Bench were on terms of equality; and he did not think that the peculiar power fell to the presiding magistrate to regulate the practice of the Court.

Here, again, Mr. Brenan was wrong; the Bench were bound to ferret the case to the bottom, and it is absurd of Mr. Brenan to thrust into his remarks the hacknied expression of "frustrating the ends of justice," when the very object for which the magistrates were sitting was to make themselves acquainted with every fact bearing upon the case from every witness who knew anything of the circumstances. To talk about the practice of the Court, if there is a practice pervading the Water Police Court which does not permit the fullest investigation and inquiry, the sooner such a practice and the Court itself is abolished the better; but even Mr. Johnson, who was there as advocate for the defendant, when appealed to by Mr. Brenan, differed from that gentleman, and gave it as his opinion that all magistrates on the Bench are on terms of equality, and that it is not the peculiar province of the presiding (or in other words the paid magistrate) to regulate the practice of the Court.

This did not terminate the magisterial differences. It appeared that the complainant and defendant, their advocates and witnesses, the bystanders, the reporters, the clerk, and the constables, were to be still further indulged by the gambols of the Bench; pleasing, perhaps, to the parties concerned, but affording a contemptible spectacle to the surrounding auditory, and a miserable exhibition of magisterial justice.

Mr. Brenan said, that no case had been made out, and that it must be dismissed. Mr. Beit desired to address the Court. Mr Brenan: I must again express my regret and surprise at this discourteous conduct, and if the proceedings of this Court are to be thus thrown into contempt, and the Bench treated with such disrespect, I shall consider it my duty to represent such conduct to His Excellency the Governor-General. Mr. Beit: It is you, sir, that have treated me with disrespect, and I am surprised at a young man like you behaving in such a manner to an old magistrate. The unpaid magistrates have a right to be treated with proper respect, and as to your reporting me to the Governor, I shall report you, and get you all you deserve. Mr. Brenan: I shall refrain from any comment on this attack.

What will the public think of this. Mr. Brenan finds Mr. Beit intractable, and terms his conduct discourteous. Mr. Beit thinks the practice of the Water Police Court irregular, and complains of disrespect. With respect to Mr. Brenan he appears to lack experience and discretion in the onerous and difficult duties which he has to perform, although he evidently desires to act correctly.

Mr. Beit has by his conduct on this and other occasions shown that he is not fitted to undertake the duties of a Justice of the Peace. Is there another magistrate in the colony besides Mr. Beit who would have issued two summonses in a charge in which his son, a boy, was the complainant, and the driver or conductor of an omnibus was the defendant, the sinning of the latter being merely an attempt to prevent Master Beit from riding on the steps of his bus? Is there another magistrate in the colony besides Mr. Beit who would have entered the Water Police Court as he did on Monday last, and as if fancying himself an umpire at a prize fight, pulled out his watch and called out "time is up"—and then desired "that man Mullin (meaning the Clerk of the Bench) to be sent for." These are specimens of the manner in which Mr. Beit conducts himself on the Bench, and to prevent a repetition of such, the Executive would do well to relieve him from the necessity of devoting any portion of his time to the magisterial duties.

The scene of yesterday, as reported in another column, will force the Executive to act so as to prevent the recurrence of such conduct. The attack upon Mr. Brenan appears in this case to have been wholly unprovoked.

With respect to Mr. Beit's denial that he used the expressions reported in Tuesday's Herald, we are assured that he did use the precise words stated, although he appears to have forgotten them.

FRASER'S ISLAND.

The Margaret and Mary, schooner, has been employed by the Government to convey to and from Frazer's Island a detachment of the Native Police.

One boat has been captured and sent to Sydney; it had been stolen by the blacks from Maryborough. Another large boat, supposed to be the Effort's, escaped, but it is probable it was sunk, as a great many shots were fired into it.

Two blacks have been apprehended, and committed to take their trial for an attempt to commit murder Several others were apprehended but could not be identified; the blacks had a quantity of flour with them, which was stolen at Maryborough.

On a table land between the range is a beautiful lagoon of fresh water, but surrounded by a dense scrub. On the east side of the island the land is good, and there is another very large lagoon on that side, small running fresh water creeks abound on the island. The fatigue encountered by the party on shore, as well as the troopers and men in the boat, was excessive. Several gentlemen accompanied the commandant for the purpose of giving him every assistance.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

AUSTRALIAN MUTUAL PROVIDENT SOCIETY.

The Annual Meeting of this Society took place at their Offices, in Pitt-street, yesterday, at three o'clock.

The Chair having been taken by M. E. Murnin, Esq.; the Secretary, Mr. William Perry, read the following REPORT.

The directors have pleasure in presenting to the members the Third Annual Report of the affairs of the Society, together with a statement of the accounts.

They have to congratulate the members on no deaths having taken place up to the present time, and they are determined to persevere in the course they have heretofore followed, viz., to look mainly to the transaction of a safe and steady business.

The number of policies issued during the year is 63, of these 53 belong to the insurance branch, 2 to the annuity branch, and 8 to the endowment branch, insuring £25,065, at an annual premium of £812 3s. 11d.

During the first six months of the past year the number of policies issued was nearly double that of the last six months. This falling off no doubt arose from the unsettled state of the community owing to the gold discoveries; the directors trust, however, that this obstruction to the progess of the Society will be only temporary, and that when the wealth and population of the colony is largely increased by immigration, a marked improvement in the affairs of this Society will take place.

Since the commencement of the Society, the number of policies issued has been 159; of these 125 are insurance policies 10 are annuity policies and 24 endowment policies. Deducting policies that have been discontinued, the total number of existing policies is 138, yielding an annual income of £1592 7s. 9d. A detailed statement showing the proportion of each class will be found in an appendix to this report.

In accordance with the suggestion made by the directors in their last report and adopted at the annual general meeting of 1851 they have had tables of rates for annuities and endowments prepared on a reduced scale. These tables were now in operation, but the unsettled state of the colony has not allowed them as yet to receive a fair trial.

The directors have also followed out the recommendation made in the last report with respect to the appointment of Mr. Perry as secretary to the society, remunerating him with a commission as follows, viz., 10 per cent on the first year's premiums, and 5 per cent on all other sources of income, including succeeding premiums, immediate annuities, and interest on securities.

This mode of remunerating the secretary has been adopted by the directors in preference to a fixed salary, as it commands a greater degree of energy on the part of that officer in managing the affairs of the society, and has been found to answer exceedingly well in other similar institutions.

Mr. James Hume, architect, has been appointed surveyor to the society, an office which it was found expedient to create, but is not entailed with any expense, the surveyor being allowed a fee when his services are required.

Since the last annual general meeting, the directors have appointed Dr. Savage, R. N., a director in the room of Mr. Michael Metcalfe, disqualified by absence.

Messrs. Thomas Holt, jun., and Arthur Savage retire by rotation, and offer themselves for re-election on this occasion.

M. E. MURNIN,
Chairman.

This being the whole of the business, thanks were voted to the Chairman, and the meeting separated.

The report of the Directors was unanimously adopted. The business was simply of a matter of course character.

THE MAYORALTY.

The result of yesterday's election has been the return of Mr. Thurlow to the Mayoral chair, for the remainder of the year, by a majority over Mr. Little of 52 votes, and as compared with Mr. Egan of 211 votes. The numbers announced by the returning officer, from the balcony of the Town Hall, were as follows:—

|---|---|
| Thurlow | 620 |
| Little | 568 |
| Egan | 409 |
| Total number of votes | 1597 |

The Town Clerk said that these appeared to be the numbers of votes recorded for each candidate, but should there be found any variation, he would officially make known the real numbers by advertisements through the press.

The candidates severally thanked the electors who had afforded them their support. Mr. Little, at the same time, intimating that the citizens having last year been headed by a legal Mayor, it was not improbable that the gentleman now announced as having been the successful competitor might be unseated by an appeal to the Supreme Court; he did not say that he would make the appeal, but he would consult with his friends and abide by their advice.

Some unwashed fellows in the street interrupted Mr. Egan in his few remarks from the balcony, and a bit of a "scrimmage" took place on the balcony itself, but as we were not in a favourable position to see either the occurrence or the whole of the actors, this bare allusion en passan must suffice for the present, as legal proceedings are spoken of in reference to the affair.

Purefoy, Holroyd, and Meymott. At Bathurst, on the 19th proximo, before His Honor Mr. Justice Dickinson, where the prosecutions will be conducted by the Attorney-General. At Maitland, on the 1st March, before His Honor the Chief Justice, where the Solicitor-General will prosecute on the part of the Crown.

The Late Rev G. E. Gregory.—The following Address to the Bishop of Sydney, on the melancholy event of the death of the Rev. Mr. Gregory, of Canberry Plains, was received by His Lordship, upon his return to Sydney last week, from his recent visitation of the southern districts:—"September 1st, 1851. To the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Sydney. My Lord,—We being residents west of the river Murrumbidgee, in the district of Queanbeyan, beg most respectfully to express to your Lordship our deep sense of the heavy loss the Church, and this district in particular, have sustained by the melancholy loss of life of the late reverend Mr. Gregory, in attempting to cross the Canberry River, when returning home from his ministerial duties. The unceasing zeal of Mr. Gregory as a clergyman, and the missionary spirit which he manifested, have excited an obvious decided increase in religious feelings, observances, and conduct in this neighbourhood, since his residence amongst us. His earnest judicious efforts to heal differences long existing between residents in the district are entitled to the warm commendation of all who desire Christian peace and good will; and had he been spared to us a few more years, we think as early youth passed away he would have been most deeply beloved and respected the more he was known. We feel the more desirous thus to express to your Lordship our feelings of regret and respect as from the continued flooded state of the rivers, we, and many others, were unable to attend the funeral of Mr. Gregory. The floods this winter have been of unexampled frequency and extent; the one immediately preceding that in which Mr. Gregory lost his life at Canberry, detained him upon the west side of the Murrumbidgee for some time, until a canoe could be got afloat for him to cross, the flood having risen nearly in one night more than twenty feet perpendicular height above the usual winter level of the river, and about two hundred yards in width, sweeping away all the usual means of communication. We beg to subscribe ourselves with much respect, your Lordship's most obedient servants." Here follow the signatures.

Stage Coach Act.—Mr. John Hilt, proprietor of the Union stage coach, running between Sydney, Parramatta, and Windsor, was yesterday convicted of having, on the 5th January carried on his coach, exclusive of the driver, 17 outside passengers, instead of 14, for which the coach is licensed. The prosecution (at the instance of Mr. Stubbs) was conducted by Mr. Roberts, and the defence by Mr. Nichols. Several legal points were taken by defendant's counsel, which, however, were overruled. The sentence of their Worships was, that defendant pay a penalty of £5 for each passenger beyond the number specified in the license, with £2 2s. costs (in all £17 2s.), or be imprisoned one calendar month. Mr. Nichols applied on the usual terms for a copy of the proceedings, which was assented to by the Bench.

Jockey Club Races.—We beg to remind the owners of horses that the entrances for the Trial Stakes, St. Leger, and Nursery Stakes close on the first instant.

Sydney Bethel Union.—The annual meeting of the friends of this Society took place last evening, Lieutenant Sadlier in the chair. The attendance we regret to say was not numerous; but the report of the proceedings was encouraging, and the addresses made were highly interesting.

Robbery with Violence.—Between the hours of nine and ten on Tuesday night, Mr. J. M. O'Brien was stopped by two men in the Old Barrack-square, by whom he was knocked down and robbed of a pencil case, a knife, a key, and about 9s. in silver. He was severely injured by the knees of the fellows upon his breast while they searched his pockets.

Obtaining Goods under False Pretences.—Hynam Josephs was yesterday committed to take his trial at the next sitting of the Central Criminal Court, on two charges of obtaining goods under the false pretence of being a returned digger, with a considerable quantity of the precious metal for sale. The one charge was preferred by Mr. Howard, of George-street, and the other by Mr Cantor, of Park-street, both publicans. The prisoner's friends at home, it is said, are in respectable circumstances; he migrated from London to Adelaide with a little property, whence, after he had spent all, he sailed for Sydney; after residing in Sydney for a few weeks he proceeded to the diggings, and, by way of set-off to his want of success as a digger, appears to have practised rather extensively on the unwary—as well at the Turon as on the road to Sydney, and during his short sojourn here. It was his intention to have proceeded by the Scotia to Port Phillip.

Purkis and Lambert remind the public that they sell, this day, at their Mart, at 11 o'clock, iron boilers, crown twine, tinware, Japan ware, tin safes, steel pens, gig and carriage lamps, meat safes, percussion caps, bolts, locks Flemish tacks, anvils, &c.; at 12 o'clock, heavy English sole leather, brushware, musical instruments, &c.—Communicated.

WATER POLICE OFFICE.—Wednesday.

Before the Water Police Magistrate, Major Lockyer, and Mr. J. N. Beit.

Upon the opening of this Court, Mr. Beit addressed himself as follows: "In the Sydney Morning Herald of to-day, I am reported to have said on the opening of this Court yesterday, "time's up; where is that man Mullin?" This reads as if I meant to speak discourteously of the Clerk of the Bench, for whom I entertain much esteem; whilst discourtesy is not in my nature. I said, "come, time's past;" and not seeing Mr. Mullin in the court, I asked for him; and forgetting his name at the moment, I hesitated a little; but I do not think I expressed myself as reported. Again, in the remarks which I afterwards offered, as to the impunity with which seamen deserted from their ships, although the report is substantially correct, an omission is made which I wish to have rectified. I said that blame was ascribable in some quarter; but I particularly excluded Mr. Inspector Powell from any share therein; he being an old and vigilant officer."

The Eliza.—John Walmsley, the steward of this whaling barque, was brought up on warrant, charged by Captain Mansfield with refusing to proceed to sea. It appeared that in addition to two of the crew, who, on Monday last, were sentenced to 30 days' imprisonment with hard labor, for refusing to proceed to sea, five others made a similar refusal on Monday morning, and demanded to see the Water Police Magistrate. This being reported to Mr. Brenan, he directed Captain Mansfield to bring them on shore, where, finding their objections to be of the most frivolous nature, he ordered them to return to their duty; four, out of the five walked out of the police office yard, without hinderance, and have not since been heard of; the fifth the prisoner at the bar, having refused to go on board again, was lodged in custody. He pleaded in his defence, first, that the place allotted for his sleeping berth in the ship was dirty; and secondly, that when he signed articles they were not read over to him by the captain, nor yet by the shipping agent.

Mr. Beit: Your having signed the articles is sufficient proof that they were read to you, and is ample evidence to convict you.

Major Lockyer: I am inclined to think that having signed the articles, the bench must conclude that they were read to you.

Mr. Brenan: I cannot concur in the conclusion, that because the ship's articles were signed by the prisoner, they were read to him. The 6th section of the Act under which he signed (7 and 8 Vict. c. 112) contemplates and provides a penalty for the violation by masters of the provision made in the 4th section, whereby it is enacted, that masters shall cause agreements to be read over and explained to every seaman, in the presence of a witness, before the execution of the agreement. It is true, that the not having had the articles read to him before he signed, does not enable the prisoner to set up that laches on the part of the master, as a defence for his breach of agreement; but, on the other hand, his having signed does not prove that the master read the articles.

Mr. Beit: The law, as now laid down by the Water Police Magistrate, is as incorrect as his conduct is unbecoming and indecorous. He has no right to reply upon a point of law laid down by myself; if he differs from me he ought to call me into the private room and state his reasons there.

Major Lockyer: I think that my brother magistrate (Mr. Beit) has expressed himself too warmly; it were better that the Court adjourn than such scenes be acted before the public.

Mr. Beit: The conduct of the Water Police Magistrate has been impertinent and disrespectful to me.

Mr. Brenan: Without referring in this place to the language used by my brother magistrate, I will now tell the prisoner, that although he cannot plead in his defence that he signed articles which were not read over to him; there is a course prescribed by the Act under which he signed, for proceeding against the master if he has practised any deception upon him.

Mr. Beit: The prisoner's allegation is quite immaterial to the case we are trying, and so has been the discussion which has arisen thereupon.

Mr. I. D. Nichols, shipping agent, was then called, and deposed to the prisoner having signed articles as steward of the Eliza, which articles were read over and explained to him in the usual manner; he had received an advance amounting to £2 17s.

Mr. Beit: But this advance is not entered in the articles. Mr. Nichols: The articles were originally signed at Hobart Town, where some of the technical details as to advance notes and the like differ from those enforced in in this port. Mr Beit: But by what authority do you engage seamen here, and obtain their signatures to articles originally made at another port, where the New South Wales Merchant Seamens Act is not in force? Mr. Nichols: I engage seamen for ships sailing under various kinds of agreements, made under other Acts than the colonial one. I engage men daily for London ships, sailing under the Mercantile Marine Act, 1850, which has not been adopted here. Shipping agents at foreign ports, say San Francisco for example, ship seamen on board British registered ships which sail under that, or the General Merchant Seamen's Act, and the agreements are enforced in all British ports. Mr. Beit: Let me give you a little advice Mr. Nichols; do not ship any more men here unless under the Colonial Act. Mr. Nichols: with great respect to your Worship, I must say that I have the best legal advice in Sydney to guide me in my business transactions. Mr. Beit: Well, I am now reasoning from analogy. Mr. Nichols: You will pardon me, sir, for saying, that if you adjudicate from analogy, you may commit a sad mistake.

The prisoner here said, that he would offer no further defence; he admitted having received the advance stated; and only begged that the Bench would order his clothes to be given up to him by the Captain.

Mr. Brenan: With regard to your clothes ——

Mr. Beit: Stop, stop. Major Lockyer, will you step with me for a moment into the private room? Major Lockyer assented, and in a few minutes the two magistrates returned into court. Mr. Beit, addressing the prisoner, told him that the majority of the Bench had decided that his clothes were not to be given up until the advance made to him was repaid.

Mr. Brenan: Prisoner, the Court finds you guilty of refusing to proceed to sea, and sentences you to be imprisoned in Darlinghurst gaol for thirty days, and there kept to hard labour. In so far as I am concerned, I make no order as to your clothes ——

Mr. Beit: There is no occasion for you to make any order; the majority of the Bench have ordered that they are not to be given up until the captain is repaid the advance made by him.

The prisoner, who stood seemingly bewildered during the hearing of his case, asked and obtained permission from Mr. Brenan to speak to his captain before he was sent to gaol.

Wednesday, 14.—Very strong breezes all day; hazy and cloudy. Latter part, distant thunder, clouds darkened all round, and between 4·30 and 6·30 o'clock, smart steady rain fell; subsequently, blew in strong gales from north and by west; much sheet lightning through the western sky.

Thursday, 15.—Light winds from west of north, and fair weather; atmosphere clear and transparent, and sun shone with great heat. Toward sunset, wind got east of north and freshened a little; night, beautifully bright. About 10 P.M., wind shifted to south-west by south, and came on to blow in brisk gales; no clouds.

Friday, 16.—Early part, light wind from south-south-west, and cloudy; forenoon, cleared, wind changed to north-east; gentle breezes rest of day.

Saturday, 17.—Light north-westerly wind, forenoon; clear sky, and very hot sun. At about 2·30 P.M., south wind arose and blew with much and increasing force through the remainder of the day; clouds soon after spread heavily over, and assumed a dirty stormy aspect through latter part of the day, and slight spittings of rain for a little while. Very strong gales during the evening and some part of the night.

Sunday, 18.—Fresh to strong breezes from south and by east throughout; cloudy all day, and towards evening the clouds wore a threatening appearance; but this wore off fore night, and no rain fell.

Monday, 19.—Light pleasant breezes from south-east and by south through this day; cloudy, early; middle and latter parts, fine bright weather; night, light airs and fine.

THE GOLD FIELDS

BRAIDWOOD.

January 17—A little hubbub took place some time since at Bell's Creek, of which I said nothing at the time, but to which I may as well refer, as the result may read a useful lesson to those who may meditate in future a similar disturbance. It arose from the opposition displayed by some of the diggers to the regulations issued by Dr. Bell. A large party had also been allowed to take up a pretty extensive tract, and this was an offence to some who wished, it would seem, to dictate to the worthy doctor the terms on which he should allow the privilege of digging. The regulations issued are, in fact, very reasonable, and in three months would actually prove much cheaper than those hitherto promulgated by the private owners of gold diggings. A meeting was held by these "advocates of freedom," and a vast deal of humbug (I cannot find a more expressive word) was uttered about the "tyranny and injustice" practised; and as a correspondent in a contemporary tells us, they gloried in the idea that the doctor had no remedy, but must submit to their terms. Mr. Redman, who happened to be on the spot, was however, employed in the matter, and soon convinced these clever gentlemen, that there was a remedy, and induced those who had been most clamorous about "forcible possession, &c.," to believe that discretion was the better part of valour, and to walk off very sulky and very chop-fallen. Nothing can be more ridiculous than this movement of these one-sided liberals or radicals. Has not every man a right to put his own price on his property, whatever that property may be. Be it a gold-field, or a house to be let, or a horse to be sold, or anything else from which a profit is anticipated? In this case, too, there was nothing to complain of. We would deprecate most strongly the growth of the spirit of radicalism among our gold-digging community, and are therefore happy to find that its development received so salutary a check. Now for another little story. Many of those who received letters and papers by last Sunday's mail, were not a little surprised to find certain small particles mixed up with their communications. "What could they be? Is it gold? no; the colour will not do." Besides, why send coals to Newcastle, or gold to Braidwood? The mystery has been at last partially unravelled. An inhabitant of the town received, it would appear, 60 oz. of brass filings by the post on that day. The parcel had broken, and the contents were therefore scattered among the letters. What was the object in sending for so large a quantity of an article not in very great request this deponent showeth not, we may have our own facts and ideas on the matter, but must not think aloud. At any rate it has been a good joke, and as such you are welcome to it. In reference to the success of our diggers, we are still warranted in speaking favourably. Some have done much; others, though at present not reaping the golden harvest they anticipated, are plodding on in hopes of brighter days. Some spots are undoubtedly very rich. In some places the gold can be seen shining in the earth as it is thrown up, and one lump is said to have been found the other day containing very nearly if not quite as much gold as earth. Araluen is still with some the favourite locality. We are given to understand a very rich quartz vein has been discovered there, and a party is in treaty for working it on the terms issued by the Government. We spoke lately of a daily coach, we believe we are warranted in stating that the arrangements will very soon be completed. Some seizures were made last night, but we hope that order will now be restored. The late terrible warnings will surely not be without their result. We are happy to find Mr. King has stated his first impressions are rather favourable as to the general good conduct which seems to prevail. The price now paid for gold at the diggings is £2 19s.

National Library of Australia http://nla.gov.au/nla.news-page1509723

The harvest has begun; the crops are in general very good. There is not the great scarcity of labour that was anticipated, but wages have risen considerably, in some cases more than 100 per cent.

CAMPBELL'S CREEK DIGGINGS.

(From the Correspondent of the Maitland Mercury.)

A few slight mishaps, such as the failure of a hole here and a bad hand, &c., affording me a leisure afternoon, I avail myself of the opportunity to give you a brief sketch of our adventures at the diggings. There is little variety in the incidents of a gold digger's life, the most successful career is the most monotonous in every circumstance but that which may be described in dry figures, and the history of any one party, with a change of names and dates, is the history of the great majority.

Having arrived at Mudgee, on a second trip to the mines, it became necessary to make up our minds as to what part of the gold-field we should shape our course to. We had a strong desire to see the Turon, but this was counterpoised by the apprehension that we should not be able to fall into work there without buying a hole, a fear which all that we could hear on the subject had a tendency to confirm. The Meroo with its ample scope and sure returns, and old acquaintance to recommend it was before us; but the Devil's Hole Creek, one of its tributaries, had possession of the trumpet of fame at Mudgee, and, without giving credit to all the fine stories of the fortunes to be picked up there, the love of novelty prevailed, and in preference to going to the World's End, we started to the Devil's Hole.

I ask pardon for making use of the last outrageous name, it has been proposed to alter it to Kennedy's Creek, in compliment to an old digger of that name, but I am afraid that the old designation has too much unction in it to fall into desuetude. Well, saving your presence! the Devil's Hole Creek we found to be wonderfully rich, but all the likely places already taken up. Hundreds of tents lined its banks on either side, and the bed of the creek was pegged out into claims from one end of the settlement to the other. The same variety of luck was as observable here as elsewhere—some were making from £1 to £20 per day, whilst others were earning little or nothing. It must not be supposed, however, that the latter, generally speaking, are always in such a predicament; the luck, as it is called, changes from one to another frequently—the ball is yours to-day, mine to-morrow. The clear average earnings may be estimated at the least at ten shillings per man per day here as well as at the Meroo, but here there is a greater disparity between the highest and the lowest earnings, and there are a greater number of persons who are wholly unsuccessful. The bed claims are deemed the richest, and yet there are a great number of holes, some of them very deep, sunk in the banks of the creek and the flats adjacent, a few of which, say about one in five, have paid well. In addition to these, there are here what are called "dry diggings," which are situated on the flats and slopes of the ridges, in some cases at a considerable distance from water. In these the mere surface soil to a depth of from twelve to eighteen inches is the depositary of the precious metal, which is found in such a situation in grains generally of a rounded shape, evidently waterworn, beautifully bright and pure, and weighing from half a grain troy to a pennyweight. The soil of the dry diggings is of a whitish colour, and resembles decomposed slate. Beds of slate veined with quartz, the tops of them running even with the surface, are also I believe invariably found in them, together with a profusion of quartz pebbles. Geology, with all its store of facts and inferences, must here, in the persons of its professors whilst surveying these wonders, acknowledge how inadequate are its data to account for them. What mighty, what protracted, what complicated material agencies and influencies have been at work in producing them who shall say. But how profitless the speculation compared with the easier task of "looking from nature up to nature's God." How easy to trace the beneficence and wisdom of the Creator in the distribution of the gold—in the relation which its discovery here and elsewhere bears to human happiness and liberty—not in working out these ends superseding the necessity for self-sacrifice in those who are born so to set an example of heroism to their fellow-men, but intimating to all by the plainness of its operations that not the hand of man but that of God has stricken the oppressor with confusion.

In prospecting on the Upper Meroo I observed that these dry diggings abound; besides which, every little creek and water-course is auriferous, and in some of them little fortunes are said to have been made. The dry diggings are, however, very uncertain. In some spots every yard may contain its ounce, whilst in others a few specks would be the the only return for the labour of digging and washing the soil of a similar space. They afford, however, a never-failing resource for "the people"—in other words, for the poor; and bye-and-bye, when the gold field common, in pursuance of the political economy of the day and the tendency of imperial rule, shall have been fenced in, the dry diggings will furnish road-side fare to the donkey that will earn for the poor man an honourable subsistence, combining dignity presently and hope in the future, and "no man shall make him afraid."

I find that I cannot now, for want of space, give you an account of my pilgrimage to the quartz ridge where the big nugget was found. It was performed, I can assure you, with a spice of Mahometan devotion, accompanied with some of its forms: for instance, the whole party made a kind of circumbendibus on their knees round the former resting-place of the big nugget, because it was the most convenient posture to be on the look-out for the nugget-pickaninnies which it was conjectured might be there planted.

One word more. I observe with regret that many persons wholly unused to a bush life, and otherwise unfitted for the occupation of gold-digging, are daily coming to the mines and returning disappointed and out of pocket. The fault is not in the diggings but in the men themselves, and scarcely in them so much as in their want of previous training with this object in view. The majority of them had too much reason to be contented at home. They might correct this. There are mighty trials of skill and valour below, six months of which, if imposed by lawful authority, might make any of them esteem the Devil's Hole a paradise.

CLARENCE RIVER.

(From the Maitland Mercury.)

I STATED to you in a former communication that I intended to search this district for gold. I am happy to inform you that we have found gold within thirty miles from Grafton, on Clowd's Creek; the sample is sent to Government by Mr. Commissioner Fry. Four men started to prospect that part of the district, namely, Messrs. Kirk, Henderson, Howlet, and B. Naughten; and there is not a place that we tried but we got gold, but we could not give the bed of the creek a fair trial, as the water rose twice while we were there. The gold is a very fine sample, and I have no doubt when it gets a fair trial but it will be found to pay.

THE QUEEN'S PROGRESS AND THE ARMY IN ENGLAND.

(From the Times.)

As if to complete the round of English sights, our continental visitors have now an opportunity of witnessing a royal progress. Such tours are not uncommon in their own countries, and, indeed, until the present reign, these peregrinations of royalty were less usual in England than in other kingdoms of Europe. French, Germans, and Russians, therefore, may institute a contrast between our customs in this particular and the usages of their own States; nor shall we be surprised if they experience some astonishment at the results of the comparison. Railways have now superseded every other mode of travelling, the princely chariot as well as the stage-coach; and the Queen of England, therefore, like all other mortals, whether emperors or peasants, betakes herself to a train. But, we trust our visitors observe, though we much doubt whether they can comprehend, the "escorts" provided for her Majesty at the various stages of this progress through her dominions. When the Emperor of Austria went the other day to Olmutz, the European public was duly edified with the details of the Imperial cortege. Three special trains had preceded with horses, tents, and other equipments, greatly resembling the actual materiel of war; and, in the carriage which conveyed the youthful Monarch himself, there sat no fewer than sixty general officers, booted and spurred. What the President of the French Republic is wont to do on these occasions most readers will remember, and will, before long, have an opportunity of observing again. Carbineers seem to be his favourite description of escort; but Cuirassiers, Hussars, Chasseurs, and Dragoons, are stationed at intervals along the whole line of his progress; nor does he ever quit a carriage except to step into a circle of superbly appointed soldiery. Now, we have been at some pains to investigate the provision made for our Queen Victoria in this interesting particular, but we have been unable to detect more than some 150 infantry, who, by the exertions of the "Lieutenant-General commanding the district," were mustered bodily at Doncaster. The circumstance becomes the more remarkable, from the evident desire of the authorities to procure the aid of military show wherever it was practicable. The tradition, in fact, of surrounding Royalty with soldiers still survives, although neither the means nor, happily, the need of satisfying it, now remains. Her Majesty, as The Court Circular informs us, "was escorted to the terminus of the Great Northern Railway by a detachment of hussars," which detachment we make bold to say comprised no inconsiderable portion of the entire dragoon force stationed in the metropolis, including even those stalwart gentlemen who recruit for their distinguished corps in the little streets round Westminster Abbey. At King's-cross, however, this appendage of Royalty vanished, and between London and Doncaster only a stray recruiting party could be found. The substitutes devised for the display were rather amusing. At one place they impressed a few coastguardsmen into the service, at another they mustered the constabulary, here and there they called out a few pensioners, but the staple of the "escorts" awaiting the Queen of England were smiling rustics or happy-looking charity children with blue and yellow flags. There is a good lesson to be learnt from these simple facts, and not by foreigners only, but by our own countrymen too. Englishmen are repeatedly told, by platform orators, that their whole land is swarming with soldiery, that the military establishment is eating into the vitals of the State, and that its maintenance at this extravagant rate is entirely owing to the luxurious caprices of the aristocracy. The plain truth is, as this Royal progress shows, that we have scarcely any soldiers to answer the call of a trumpet. The demands of our colonies on the army are so large, and the duties kindly created for us in Ireland so severe, that it is almost an impossibility to get a thousand men together, without dismantling Portsmouth of its garrison or London of its guards. We should much like to know, indeed, how many of our readers were cognizant of the division of England into military districts, or could have told the name of the officer who, in virtue of this superintendance, was called upon to receive her Majesty at Doncaster. So utterly denuded, in fact, does the country appear, in the eyes of those inhabituated to continental habits, that we heard the other day of a Frenchman who was seriously scandalised at the seclusion to which English soldiers were condemned within the walls of their barracks. In their actual non-existence he could not bring himself to believe, and he concluded, therefore, that they were systematically confined to their quarters until required for action. If foreigners will but view these facts in their proper light, they may learn a lesson as valuable as any to be gathered from the marvels of the Great Exhibition. Making an abatement for the immunities derived from our singular position, they must see not only how economically our military establishment is calculated, but how thoroughly we are enabled to dispense with the employment of soldiers in the pacific duties of home life. It is not from mere custom, or tradition, or caprice, that the French President travels with a little army, while the Queen of England travels with a Railway Director. The contrast exemplifies the difference between two great nations, their people, governments, and practices. Military parade speaks of government by force, its absence of self-government, acting through the good sense of the country at large. We lose in splendour, it is true. We can offer no magnificent spectacles of reviews and battles to those accustomed to such displays. For our occasional musters in Hyde Park we are driven to seek soldiers at seventy miles distance, and even to impound the sentries from the Horse Guards. It was only by dislocating the establishment of every "military district" that we succeeded in collecting some 2000 or 3000 additional troops in the neighbourhood of London against the anticipated requirements of the Exhibition. As to the Crystal Palace itself, the foreign visitor saw no more than a single brace of sentries at the door, nor could he have discovered, from the displays of the English department, any vestige of military trade. The old speculation in infantry shakos still showed itself in some half-dozen specimens of headpieces; and, in one remote corner, were some effigies in warlike accoutrements. — But, excepting these half-discernible traces, we scarcely know of any part of our Exhibition from which a visitor could have derived the notion that England contained an army to be clad and appointed—a circumstance the more remarkable from the contrast afforded by the consignments of every other State. Spain, France, Russia, the Zollverein, America, Austria, and Prussia, all threw the weight of their contributions into articles of military display. New field-pieces, burnished cuirasses, improved swords, unerring revolvers — these were the exhibitions of our continental rivals. Even their very toys were military, and the device of an Austrian plaything seems to lie between a mimic cuirassier and a mimic dragoon. These things tell their own tale, and we trust it may be told to some purpose; but among all the features of the case, none will appear more remarkable than that, with all these disadvantages, we should still be persuading ourselves that we are the most military and "aggressive" people under the sun. A foreigner will hardly be able to comprehend by what obliquity of conception an army so small as not to suffice for the appliances of domestic state could ever have been represented as an overgrown establishment maintained for the benefit of a privileged class. The publication, however, of the recent report from the Estimates Committee will do much to disabuse the public mind, and a calculation of the number of soldiers procurable between London and Edinburgh, for the honour of Royalty itself, will furnish no indifferent measure of that army of which so many fables have been told.

IRELAND AND AMERICA.

(From the Times, September 30.)

A CERTAIN little poem relates how a certain personage one day took a walk to see how his snug little farm, the earth, went on. Though it is unnecessary to travel so far for a precedent or a justification of the tour which the American Minister is making in Ireland, there is one point in common between the two visits—viz., that Ireland to all practical purposes belongs to that Power whose Minister it is now entertaining. Mr. Abbot Lawrence gives way to a very natural instinct when he makes a pilgrimage to the hearths and the altars that feed the population of the United States. The American who stands on the quays at New York sees a vast human tide pouring in at the rate of a thousand a day to swell the numbers, the wealth, and the power of his country. He sees that it was the direst necessity which drove them from the land of their fathers, and he recognised in that necessity the providential means by which the vast continent of North America shall be added to the dominion of man. He hears the sad tale of the immigrants, and sees it too generally confirmed by their miserable aspect. His own political sympathies will naturally be with the supposed victims of tyrannical laws and aristocratic extortion. On further acquaintance with these hapless refugees his interest cannot but increase, for he finds them affectionate and hopeful, genial and witty, industrious and independent in fact, the rude element of which great nations are made. Hence the desire to see that strange region of the earth where such a people was produced and could not stay—an island the misfortunes of which are destined to form so conspicuous a feature in American story. The terrible incidents of the last six years, not to go further back, will be the domestic traditions of half the American people, and the dreadful scenes of fever and of famine, which have so often shocked our readers, will pass from father to son for many generations on the banks of the Missisippi, or the shores of the Pacific. It is this nursery of American citizens, this seed plot of Transatlantic States, this great human preserve that Mr. Lawrence is now exploring, as we think, with as natural a curiosity as if he had sought, with the crowd, the ancient seats of science and art, and were measuring the Acropolis of Athens, or the Forum of Rome.

His Excellency has too much respect for this country, and too just a sense of his position, to let the Irish see how an American cannot but regard them. He knows very well that they are all his own fellow-citizens in embryo, and that every Celt will one day renounce the sceptres and coronets of the older world. It is better for all parties, perhaps, that it should be so, little as we may like to see our society, our laws, and our Sovereign, the objects of worse than indifference. Mr. Abbot Lawrence says nothing of all this. The Irish flock to an American Minister as to an angel from heaven, for if he is curious to see the place the Irish come from, they are equally curious to see a man from America—the goal of all their hopes and expectations. They have set their faces towards America, and as men on a march see chiefly those who are before them, on the spot which they will the next moment tread themselves, so the New World is every year more vivid, and the Old World more faint, in the Irish imagination. Hence it is that Mr. Lawrence finds himself received with almost the honours of Royalty. Railway directors and corporations give him special trains, banquets and addresses, and every city prepares an ovation. What can Lord Clarendon, with the very best intentions, offer to compare with the sympathies of a man whose country has welcomed a million Irishmen in the last four years? The railway companies have a special interest in these civilities. They have just been completed in time to convey the aborigines of Ireland to the ports where they take leave of their country. Strange to say, they derive a fleeting prosperity from depopulation and despair. So, at Galway. Mr. Abbot Lawrence is eagerly laid hold of as a patron of the plan for making that city a Transatlantic packet station and an emigrant depot.—At Cork it may be supposed that similar expectations have helped the enthusiasm evoked by the arrival of an American Minister. Mr. Lawrence, however, to his credit, speaks only of such a communication as might be supposed to exist between two equally spreading and equally increasing nations. He delicately avoids any allusion to that uniform onward movement—vestigia nulla retrorsum, from Ireland to the opposite shore.

In the face of facts it certainly required all the force of politeness in an American Minister standing at Galway or at Cork, to wish happiness for the Irish in their own country, and to point out the natural resources by which six million, eight million, ten million, or even fifteen million people, could be sustained in Ireland. The prosperity and happiness he speaks of may some day reign over that beautiful island. Its fertile soil, its rivers and lakes, its water power, its minerals, and other materials for the wants and luxuries of man, may one day be developed, but all appearances are against the belief that this will ever happen in the days of the Celt. That tribe will soon fulfil the great law of Providence which seems to enjoin and reward the union of races. It will mix with the Anglo-American, and be known no more as a jealous and separate people. Its present place will be occupied by the more mixed, more docile, and more serviceable race, which has long borne the yoke of sturdy industry in this island, which can submit to a master and obey the law. This is no longer a dream, for it is a fact now in progress, and every day more apparent. No kind wishes, no legislative measures can stay the exodus of a people who have once found the path from intolerable degradation to comfortable and dignified independence. Even if the rulers of this country should change their mind, and resolve not to let the people go, that resistance would only add another impulse to the movement. As the Irish have clung together at home, so will they cling together in their wanderings. That at least is what they do now. It is scarcely possible to suppose Mr. Abbot Lawrence blind to what passes before his eyes, and we can only admire the dextrous politeness with which he expresses his sympathy and his hopes for the Irish, with scarcely a hint at their flight from the land of their fathers to the country of which he is the representative.

THE FAILURE OF THE CUBAN INVASION.

(From the London Times, September 23.)

THE spectacle just witnessed at Havana is one that must win some compassion from the just, as well as sympathy from the interested or the weak. A number of men who had fought with courage in the open field, and many of whom had since wandered for days, wounded and famished, have been publicly executed as pirates, that is, as robbers and murderers, declaring with their last breath, that they believed they were assisting an oppressed and indignant population in the work of their deliverance. Such a spectacle is rare among civilised nations and in civilised times, for the simple reason, that society is then too strong for buccaneers and marauders to ply their trade with any hope of success. When, then, such an incident does actually occur, the heroes of the tragedy gain something from the strange and incredible nature of their crime. It is difficult to regard them as enemies of the human race, for that is the definition of pirates, simply because the class cannot be said to exist, and it is found more easy to believe them something more familiar and creditable—patriots, deliverers, Quixotic enthusiasts, knights errant, or something of that kind. In this instance, the crime, for such it undoubtedly is, derives some colour from the well-known character of all Spanish government. It is a common belief, that an island rescued from the yoke of Spain, and annexed to the great American federation, must be the better for the change, and emerges, in fact, from darkness to light, and from slavery to freedom. We may charitably hope that a tinge of political romance gilded the dreams of these unhappy adventurers, and that they really imagined they were seeking a crown of glory, as well as houses and lands, sugar mills, live stock, negroes, and other valuable commodities.

But when the flimsy veil of political romance has been withdrawn from the crime, it is evident our compassion, if we cannot withhold it, is due rather to the folly than to the fate of the criminals. Compassion is much more justly due to the unfortunate authorities who have been driven to a rigor from which in the first instance they had recoiled; who were made to suffer the penalty of their former forbearance, in the return of the very men they had pardoned and released; who are kept on the tenterhooks of a fearful expectation, in the presence of a vast and aggressive power, teeming with marauders and sympathisers; who are compelled to maintain a large naval and military force against unseen foes, in a time of peace; and who, having tried in vain the alternative of mercy, were driven to the other alternative of justice, and so forced to endure the stigma of apparent but unavoidable cruelty. What could the Cuban authorities do? What line of conduct can the Americans themselves suggest to a State condemned to suffer a periodical invasion by lawless bands in a time of peace? If the Governor of Cuba and the Cuban authorities had no other interests to attend to than the pleasure of the Americans, of course they would disband the royal forces, and leave the island, with all its valuable property, to be shared among the first body of American citizens that could establish itself at Havana. Or, if this were too manifest a treason, or too tame a surrender, they might retain the island for a while, just as an arena for the display of American valour, allowing a few hundred loyal soldiers to be shot off at each successive landing of the invaders, and invariably allowing the latter to retire unmolested and recruit for another landing. It certainly would appear that some of the American sympathisers think themselves entitled to such treatment, for their sympathy with the invaders is partly founded on the fact, that owing to their superior skill in sharpshooting or manœuvring they achieved a fearful slaughter of the Spanish forces. But it is evident that the Cuban authorities had other duties to perform than complaisance to the sentiments of the American public; they had the island to keep for their Queen, not to speak of the other interests at stake; and this paramount duty unfortunately involved the necessity of making an example of the invaders. Even in this extremity they seem to have tempered justice, not to say the claims of self-preservation, with mercy. The first batch taken, while the great body of the invaders was still in arms, they put to death. When the invasion was extinguished, and the danger was over for the present, they assigned to Lopez the ignominious death of a pirate; they shot the principal offenders under him, and spared the lives of the remaining 150, not, however, setting them at large to renew the attempt next spring.

The American journals, now that the expedition has so signally failed, and the hostility, or at least the indifference, of the Cuban population has been so plainly demonstrated, condemn Lopez and his dupes in unmeasured terms. They admit what everybody knows—that a similar set of desperadoes would meet with very little mercy from the President of the United States, if they fell into his hands when engaged on a similar errand. We wish we could persuade ourselves, however, that the principal crime of these men, in the eyes of the Americans, is not their failure. It is admitted to be piracy, simply because, like treason, it has not prospered. In the midst of the grave censures which are pronounced on the unfortunate scheme, we find every now and then some very suspicious prophecies of the fate of Cuba, which it is said will be hastened by the late severities. The Governor is told, not that he has exceeded the law of the case, but that he has been injudicious, though in the same article it is said that the liberation of Cuba is to proceed, not from without, but from within. In the island itself these severities seem to have been taken as a matter of course; and they could only hasten the doom of the Spanish dominion by their effect on the irascible temper of the American public. Perhaps, after the fact of two large expeditions having sailed from American ports for the conquest of Cuba, with the scarcely concealed connivance of the authorities—the second on so large a scale that, though only a part of it sailed, it was able to keep the field more than a week—the Americans would do well to abstain from superfluous criticism on the conduct of the Spanish authorities. If Cuba really is to be American—if the pear must one day ripen and drop into that capacious and fortunate lap—then there is no necessity to hurry the day, either by invading Cuba in a time of peace, or by abusing its authorities when they are clearly in the right.

MURDER AND SUICIDE AT CAMBERWELL.—On Tuesday morning about 8 o'clock, one of the most fearful murders that has been committed for some years was discovered in Wyndham-road, Camberwell, a respectable tradesman in that vicinity having cut the throats of his three young children and destroyed himself. The name of the father was Anthony Fawcett, aged 43, and on Monday he took possession of a grocer's shop at the corner of Queen's-place, Wyndham-road, lately occupied by Mr. Stockham. He brought with him his wife and three children; Emily Fawcett, six years and a half old; Frederick, one year and seven months; and Mary Ann, who is badly wounded. He seemed to have been greatly disappointed with his bargain, and grumbled very much to his wife on Monday, but nothing in his appearance indicated he would attempt such a horrible deed. On Tuesday morning, a little after 7 o'clock, the family got up, and his wife dressed the two elder children and took them down stairs to breakfast, leaving the baby in bed up stairs. While the children and their father were partaking of their morning meal in the back parlour at 8 o'clock, the wife ran out to convey two letters to the post-office, which is only two or three hundred yards off the street. On her return she was horror stricken at finding her two elder children with their throats cut, and on proceeding backwards she perceived her husband cutting his throat in the back kitchen. She immediately ran out and alarmed the neighbours, when police constable Edward Shanvill, who was on duty near the spot, entered the house, and instantly proceeded to the back kitchen, where he found the murderer lying under the sink, quite insensible, with blood gushing from his neck. He took him up, and found a large table-knife in his grasp, which he had cut his throat with, and at the time he was not dead. A doctor was directly sent for, and Mr. King, surgeon of Camberwell, attended, but death took place a few minutes after his arrival. On the constable entering the back parlour he discovered Emily, aged six years and a half, lying dead, with her throat dreadfully cut, under the window, and Mary Ann sitting nearly opposite, with hers also cut, but not effectually. Dr. King, as well as other surgeons, who had been called in, attended to the latter, and there is every likelihood that the poor girl will recover. On proceeding up-stairs the constable perceived the younger child with its head hanging out of bed, quite bed, its throat cut, and the bed deluged with blood. There can be no doubt that the father committed the murders with three knives, as a large bacon knife, covered with blood, was found in the bed-room, a table knife in the back parlour, and another in the man's hand. They all appeared [illegible] have been recently sharpened. Superi[illegible]nt Lund was shortly on the spot, whe[illegible] were forwarded to the coroner of the horrible circumstance. As soon as the news got spread about, thousands of people assembled about the house, and it required a number of police to keep order.—European Times, October 4.

Mr. Macdonald was on his way from Eusten to Melbourne for the benefit of his health. He was forty-eight years of age, twenty-five of which were spent in the service of the Colonial Government, the last few of which he was suffering from exhaustion, the effects of the climate, and arduous duties of too extensive a district.

[ADVERTISEMENT.]
TO MR. SOLOMON PHILLIPS.
Parramatta, January 20, 1852.
DEAR SIR,—We have heard with much regret, that after a residence in this town of sixteen years, you are about to proceed with your family to the colony of Victoria.
We should be wanting in justice to you and to ourselves, did we allow you to depart without endeavouring to express, however inadequately, the sense we entertain of the usefulness and benevolence of your career amongst us; you have taken an active, nay, a laborious part in all institutions having for their object the diminution of human misery and the increase of human happiness.
The accompanying present must, however, be considered but as a small Testimonial of the esteem in which you are held by your fellow-townsmen, and we trust it will be acceptable to you as a token of our friendship and regard.
Wishing yourself, Mrs. Phillips, and family, health and happiness, with a safe and speedy passage, and every success in your future career,
We remain, dear Sir,
Your faithful friends,
For and on behalf of the subscribers,
G. Oakes — P. Hill
T. Jones — H. H. Bobart

REPLY:
GENTLEMEN,—Permit me to tender you my sincere acknowledgments for the kind and flattering address you have been pleased to present to me.
It is a source of extreme happiness to know that my humble assistance to the benevolent and other institutions of this town, has gained for me the good opinion of so many of my respected fellow-townsmen; you may rest assured that I shall ever feel a warm attachment to your institutions, and be happy to hear of their continued success.
However small you may consider the valuable present accompanying your address, I beg to assure you, that to me it will be a lasting memento of your esteem and regard, coupled as it is with the handsome acknowledgments of my trifling services.
Accept my heartfelt thanks for the good wishes you have expressed towards Mrs. Phillips, my family, and myself, and that you and your families may enjoy every happiness through life, is the sincere wish of,
Gentlemen,
Your faithful and obliged friend,
S. PHILLIPS.

MR. GEORGE A. LLOYD has the pleasure to announce to THE CONNOISSEURS AND PATRONS OF ART, that he has been instructed to sell by public auction, on WEDNESDAY next, the 28th instant, at 12 o'clock,
A portion of a GALLERY OF PAINTINGS, from the first masters; the property of a well known amateur, who is unfortunately compelled to part with them on account of his removal into town.
Among these GEMS OF ART, are—
LANDSCAPE, Snowdon, in Wales. The fidelity to nature, accompanied by brilliancy of effect, which characterises this beautiful picture, would almost justify the owner in attributing it to Gainsborough; having all the freedom of touch of that great master, and if not painted by him, would not derogate from his fame.
ARCADIA, a Composition by Talami. The works of this master are in high repute in Italy, and this excellent painting is in all respects worthy of him. It was probably painted between 1650 and 1670, and is in singularly fine preservation. The classical purity of the composition is elaborated by the most harmonious combination of architectural and rural objects, in the execution of which freedom of touch is joined to delicate finish—the figures being complete studies. It is not too much to say that this painting is without a rival in the colony.
MOONLIGHT, a supposed Creswick. An almost magical representation of the double effects of moonlight and firelight, painted on Honduras panel.
THE FORTUNE TELLER, by Kidd. A prize painting, sold in London for 50 guineas.
FRUIT AND FLOWERS. A magnificent display of the gorgeous colouring and careful delineation of the Van Huysum School. The ripe and pulpy fruit looks as if it would yield to the lightest pressure of the fingers, while the flowers vie with nature in richness and delicacy. Notwithstanding its evident antiquity, in a most excellent state of preservation.
HOLY FAMILY.—A very fine panel painting of the Flemish School.
FRUIT AND FLOWERS. A very pretty morceaux—the child introduced, charmingly conceived and executed.
DUTCH COURT YARD, or KITCHEN. An admirable specimen of the skilful handling and exquisite finish of the old Dutch School; the perspective and attention to detail are so accurate, that the spectator may without much stretch of imagination persuade himself that he is gazing on reality, &c., &c. 1815

Half the purchase money may be paid by easy instalments, through the first Australian Building Society, and the residue by approved bill at 6 months.
MR. MORT has received instructions to sell by public auction, at his Rooms, George-street, on TUESDAY, the 27th January, at 11 o'clock,
That very delightfully situated Cottage above described. It is substantially built of stone, and containing two parlours, two bedrooms, servants' bed-room, and kitchen.
THERE ARE TWO ACRES OF LAND.
(The Cottage in question occupying the most eastern portion), from which is commanded the charming view over Double Bay, the Heads, &c., whilst the bracing influence of the sea breeze are enjoyed with perfect shelter from the hot winds.
The property is leasehold, the unexpired term of 28 years, being what is now sold, subject to the small ground rent of £10 per annum. The lease is held under the Incumbent of St. James's Church, and is renewable from time to time during his life upon payment of a small fine. The interest upon the outlay required for the purchase of two acres in this locality would be at least £60 or £70 a-year, whilst the ground rent as above stated is only £10!
 A charming spot, well worthy the attention of Bachelors, or Married Couples with small families.

SHEEP WITHOUT STATION.
Being from the well known Bergen-op-Zoom flock, New England.
FOR POSITIVE SALE.

The following sheep, viz.:
1120 ewes, six years old
1115 ewes, five years old
2140 September lambs of both sexes, the progeny of the above ewes
4375 more or less
These are unquestionably good sheep, not a cull amongst them, sold only for the purpose of making room on the station.
They are warranted sound, and never to have been diseased, and will be delivered over to the purchaser on the Bergen-op-Zoom station, New England, on the 14th March.
Terms at sale.
 A first rate chance for any one wanting really prime sheep, the ewes are in good condition, and with a few months on a fattening run, would boil down to great advantage. The lambs are very superior. 1814

THE BEAUTIFUL STATION OF "TOOMCUL,"
In the Burnett District, 80 miles from Wide Bay, and the same from Gayndah, together with 9300 SHEEP, as fine woolled as any in the District, and all in high health and condition.
MR. MORT has received instructions from the proprietor to sell by public auction, at his Rooms, George-street, on WEDNESDAY, 4th February, at 11 o'clock,
The above Sheep, together with the valuable Station on which they are depasturing, well known in the district by its native name of "TOOMCUL;"
and recognized as a first-rate fattening run, always most abundantly watered, and luxuriantly grassed.
The sheep are exceedingly well bred, the wool being well known in the London market under the F and U brand. There are 60 "Tenterfield" rams upon the station. The sheep are a complete flock, and comprise about
3300 Ewes
3000 Wethers
3000 male and female Weanes
9300, more or less
There are upon the station a good House, Woolshed, Huts, Stockyard, Paddock, &c.; also, Hurdles for about 10,000 sheep.
The advantages of new country are now so well understood, as is shown by the prices realized for these northern stations over older runs, that it is almost needless to call attention to the fact. The large profits derived from these fattening stations is well known; and as the run now offered for sale is in that quality highly superior, it will be the purchaser's own fault if he does not quickly realise sufficient with the wool to nearly cover his purchase.
The distance from water carriage is only 80 miles. The station is in high working order; and as the terms will be liberal, the opportunity is an excellent one for any party seeking a really good station.
Stores, &c., at a valuation.
Terms at sale. 1808

With the above will be sold
15,000 FIRST-CLASS SHEEP,
